MPAA STATEMENT ON PROPOSED FCC RULEMAKING

The following statement is from Motion Picture Association of America, Inc. (MPAA) Chairman and CEO Dan Glickman:

“The American motion picture and television production industry applauds the decision of the FCC to recognize the critical role of legitimate content in the continuing development of the Internet. Today’s notice of proposed rulemaking (NPRM) makes clear that reasonable network management includes the ability to stop unlawful distribution of content online. Although we are not proponents of government regulation of the Internet, by highlighting the importance of intellectual property in this way, the Commission signaled that American creativity and ingenuity, and millions of related jobs will be preserved. We look forward to reviewing the NPRM in its entirety and working with the Chairman and the Commission to craft policies that will lead to widespread broadband adoption, greater consumer choice, and preservation of American intellectual property online.”
